Stylish globe-trotters Alexandra Bruskoff, 40, and Natasha Parvizian Gorgue, 41, know how to host a party. This month, the spunky entrepreneurs host the latest installment of InTwo, a luxury shopping pop-up through which they transform private homes into upscale boutiques featuring international and local designers, and brands like Paris-based Nour Hammour, New York City's LoveShackFancy and Houston's own ILA.

Self-proclaimed jeans-and-T-shirt gals at heart, the accessory-driven fashionistas met at a mutual friend's 30th birthday party back in 2011 and have enjoyed discovering emerging artists together ever since. "There's a lot of creative talent out there in little pockets of the world," says Parvizian Gorgue, who particularly loves vintage shopping in Aspen.

From red carpet-worthy ensembles to activewear, the recurring pop-ups spotlight a designer collection fit for every occasion, alongside must-have accessories like The Gypsy Woman's beaded fringe bags, EF Collection's fine jewelry, luscious Jitrois stretch leather jackets and Republic Boot Co. custom boots.

The September event, which takes place in Bruskoff's West U home, is the duo's sixth, and they have even bigger plans for the future: "There are no boundaries as far as what we're into."
